FACULTY OF MEDICINE

The Faculty of Medicine, Naresuan University, has focused on a few areas of postgraduate studies in accelerating health systems developments by empowering more skillful researchers and health professionals. In the situations where all health systems face scarce resources, countries need to have cost-effective public health policies and health policies to reduce burdens on the over-stretched health service systems.

In 2010, the Faculty of Medicine launched an international Master of Science program in Health Security Financing and Management to strengthen the health security objectives of international and national health policy agencies. Health professionals, including public policy analysts need to be trained with high quantitative analytical skills to support the policy agenda of providing universal health coverage to reach national and global health security. This one-year international program takes in high capacity full-time students to the highly structured courses and the individual independent study related to health security issues.
